PREFACE

THIS Outline Dictionary is designed as a help to all who have occasion to study the Bantu or kindred languages of Africa, or any little-known language in an uncivilized country.

It consists of a short English Vocabulary and Memorandum Book combined, providing a means of recording words of such languages in a portable and convenient form, and is intended to be used in connexion with the Outline Grammar (for Bantu) by the same Editor.

The List of Words is strictly limited, both by convenience and by its special purpose. Thus :

- (1) To catch the meaning of a word as used by a native and record it under an appropriate English one is in general the safer way of arriving at a command of his language. Hence the List omits words for which an equivalent is not to be expected among races little affected by civilization, its arts, ideas, social system, &c.
- (2) In Bantu nouns are readily formed from the verb, and the adjective proper is comparatively rare, its place being largely supplied by a verb-form or by a noun with a preposition. Hence, when choice had to be made, verbs are included in the List rather than nouns, and nouns rather than adjectives.

(3) Amongst the endless variety of English (so called) synonyms, those are selected which seem most readily to suggest themselves to the mind as the language of every-day life and conversation rather than of literature. On the other hand, native languages will be found so rich in relation to some particular subjects, that additions of suitable equivalents may have to be made to the List. Blank pages for such additions are provided at the end of each letter-division, and also at the end of the book.

(4) Names of all but a few of the most common animals, birds, fishes, insects, trees, and plants, &c., are omitted. A few are placed, with blank pages for native names, after the List of Words. Numerals are similarly treated.

After all, the most serious difficulty is to ensure that, when an English word has a variety of possible uses and meanings, the particular meaning to which a native word recorded is meant to correspond should clearly appear. The same English word may be used as noun, adjective, and verb, and the verb both as active and neuter, with metaphorical as well as various literal meanings attaching to such use. Hence the List of Words is supplemented by what are in fact very brief notes, as a help (but by no means a complete guide) to accurate distinction of meanings. Parts of speech are indicated, and particular meanings in some cases specified.

Communications and suggestions on the subject of the Bantu dialects, especially with a view to systematizing their comparative study, would be gladly received by the Editor, addressed to c/o British South Africa Company, Fort Jameson, North-Eastern Rhodesia, or to Christ Church, Oxford, England (to be forwarded).

INTRODUCTION

It is hoped that all who propose to make a methodical use of the Dictionary will pay special attention to the following suggestions:—

- (1) When an English word wanted is not found in the List, it can be inserted in its place or in the blank pages provided for the purpose at the end of the book, or a familiar word of similar meaning can be looked for.
- (2) Many English words have several distinct meanings, i. e. are equivalent to several different words. In such cases it is practically useless to write down a native word without showing to which meaning it corresponds, and attending to the brief notes occasionally supplied.
- (3) The Plural form of a Bantu noun should always be given, as well as the Singular, or its distinctive prefix clearly shown. A Bantu adjective seems (as a rule) best recorded in its root form, i. e. the form which remains when all variable prefixes of whatever kind are removed. A Bantu verb should be given in its simplest form, i. e. usually the Imperative Singular, or the Infinitive without the Infinitive prefix.

- (4) A uniform system of writing native words should be strictly adhered to, and the system itself clearly explained. A system widely adopted (in the main) and found sufficient for writing the Swahili language by the use of the English alphabet is given below (from the Outline Grammar by the same Editor).

THE ENGLISH ALPHABET AS USED IN WRITING BANTU WORDS.

It appears that Bantu sounds may for the most part be sufficiently indicated by letters of the English alphabet, if used according to the following system. It is practically that of the Royal Geographical Society, Bishop Steere, and most others who have attempted to write Bantu words for English readers.

(1) The English vowels are used for the sounds they represent in Italian, i. e.—

a for the sound ar in the word farther.

e	„	a	„	fate.
----------	---	----------	---	-------

i	„	ee	„	feet.
----------	---	-----------	---	-------

o	„	or	„	sort.
----------	---	-----------	---	-------

u	„	oo	„	root.
----------	---	-----------	---	-------

NOTE:—1. These five letters have been found practically sufficient for writing Swahili. If in other dialects they are not so, it is easy to use the common mark of a short vowel in writing (or italic type in printing) to distinguish ă or a for the sound of a in the word fat.

ě or e „ e „ pet.

ĩ or i „ i „ sit.

õ or o „ o „ not.

ũ or u „ u „ full.

And other modifications may be written ä for the sound of u in the word sun,

ë „ er „ herd,

and so on.

Only it is necessary in these cases always to add a note to explain what sound is meant by a vowel so distinguished from the plain vowel.

2. Vowels are each pronounced separately, even when two or more come together, as (e.g.) in the Swahili word aiauae, pronounced ah-ee-ah-oo-ah-eh, 'he who inspects it.'

If a true diphthong sound occurs, it may be necessary to distinguish it by a mark above the two vowels so sounded.

Thus :—

âi for the sound of i in mile.

âu „ ow „ now.

ôi „ oy „ boy.

ou „ o „ go.

and so on.

(2) The English consonants which have only one sound are used to represent that sound, i.e. b, d, f, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, r, t, v, w, z. As to the rest—

c, the sounds of which are k and s, is available (as also are q and x) for the representation of any sound not otherwise provided for, e.g. a click. But it is retained in the combination ch for the sound of those letters in chin.

g, is used only as in go, not for j, as in gem.

s, is used only as in sit, not for z, as in rise.

y, is always used as a consonant as in you, not as a vowel, as in any.

r, and l, are often not distinguished in Bantu.

Combinations of the above consonants are always available, however strange to English ears, e.g. ty, dy, for modifications of ch, and j; zh, for the sound of z, in azure; dh, when it is necessary to distinguish the sound of th in then (dhen) from its sound in thin. Other combinations used are pf, fw, ts, bz, mbw, mdz, nt, nd, nh, &c.

NOTE:—1. M very often represents a more or less distinct syllable, sometimes resembling um, sometimes mu (mw before a vowel). When its syllabic force requires to be clearly marked, it may be written m' or 'm.

n, also has often a similar independence as a syllable, a sound inclining to in or ny and sometimes needs to be distinguished as n', or 'n. ng', thus written, is adopted by Bishop Steere to represent a peculiar African sound, viz. a close combination of the sounds of n and g, which does not pass on to the vowel following, though forming one syllable with it, something like the first ng, in singing. In Swahili, ng' oa and ngoa are quite distinct.

2. Sounds difficult to catch, pronounce, and write down as above, especially when characteristic of a tribe or locality, should at least be noticed and described, and if necessary marked by some special sign.

It is impossible sometimes to distinguish in native pronunciation p and b, t and d, k and g, s and z, f and v, &c. But a note can be made of this difficulty and of the way, whatever it is, adopted to meet it.

The accent in Bantu words very generally falls on the last syllable but one. Where it does not do so, the vowel of the syllable on which it falls should be marked with an accent, e.g. Swahili, tháruba.
